DETAILED ACTION

Specification

1. The Title of the invention is not sufficiently descriptive. A new Title is required that is more clearly indicative of the novelty in the invention to which the claims are directed.
2. The disclosure is objected to because it lacks Section headings, such as: Related Applications, Field of the Invention, Background of the Invention, Brief Summary of the Invention, Brief Description of the Drawings, and Detailed Description of the Invention.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

3. The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.
4. Claims 1-100 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.
5. While applicant may be his or her own lexicographer, a term in a claim may not be given a meaning repugnant to the usual meaning of that term. See In re Hill, 161 F.2d 367, 73 USPQ 482 (CCPA 1947).

The term "similarity data" in the claims for "decoded features" seems to be used (at least in claims 17 and 64) to mean "probability of correct and false classification" for various actual vs pattern recognizer decision hypothesis pairs, and the associated "feature" seems to really be a "recognition hypothesis" (a "decoding" of the category, e.g., identity of an input phoneme or typed character). However, the standard meaning of "similarity" in pattern recognition is a numerical value indicating how geometrically close a given feature vector of measurements is to another (e.g., a reference template vector) according to some "distance" metric. The term "feature" itself (being a component of a "feature vector") usually refers to a scalar parameter which has been extracted by processing the input signal by a pattern recognizer, and does not per se imply that any classification in terms of a statistical hypothesis class has yet been made. The latter, standard usage, "features", of course, are, by definition, "representative of said input signal", so that no specific recitation thereof is needed (cf. e.g. claims 1 and 49).

The term "confidence data", on the other hand, is confusingly used in connection with aligned pairs of "features" in a sequence (or are "predetermined features" aligned with the input sequence independently of one another?), which "features" terminology now seems to conform to standard usage, their "confidence data" now seemingly referring to their "similarity" or "distance" in the art-standard sense.

Then things get further confused when the originally distinct concepts "confidence" and "similarity" are blurred together by reciting "using said confidence data, to provide a measure of the similarity between the input sequence of features and the stored sequence of features" (e.g., in claims 1 and 49). Clarification, please!

6. Thus, the examiner cannot apply the prior art to the current multitude of confusingly vague and indefinite claims, and requests that the claims be rewritten so as to have unambiguous terminology which makes it clear:

- when recognition decisions are designated by “features”, and when actual measured numerical feature(s) are intended, and
- when two (or more) sequences are paired and compared element by element, and when individual features in an input sequence are independently identified (“decoded”), one by one, using individual reference features independently of one another (is this what “predetermined features” is alluding to?), thus without regard for the latter being ordered in any relevant sequence.
